

Michael Greenberger is the Director of the Center for Health and Homeland Security (CHHS) at the University of Maryland and a professor at the School of Law. CHHS and the six constituent professional schools which form its core (the University of Maryland Schools of Medicine, Law, Dentistry, Pharmacy, Nursing and Social Work) work on a broad range of legal, policy and scientific issues pertaining to the health policy aspects of counterterrorism. CHHS has a staff of 45 professionals who work on a broad range of homeland security and emergency response issues for federal, state, and local governmental agencies, as well as medical researchers including policy development, planning, and training relating to pandemic flu. More information about CHHS can be found at: www.umaryland.edu/healthsecurity.

Professor Greenberger designed and teaches two courses focused on counterterrorism and emergency public health response: "Homeland Security and The Law of Counterterrorism," which was taught in the Law School for the eighth time last semester; and "Homeland Security: Emergency Response to Natural and Man Made Disasters," bringing students and faculty from the various university professional schools together to study effective governmental policies pertaining to catastrophic public health emergencies.

In 1999, Professor Greenberger began service as Counselor to the United States Attorney General, and then became the Justice Department's Principal Deputy Associate Attorney General. Included within his portfolio of responsibilities were several counterterrorism projects concerning both law enforcement and public health policy, including organizing a nationwide counter terrorism war game ("TOPOFF I").

Prior to entering government service, Professor Greenberger was a partner for over 20 years in the Washington, D.C. law firm of Shea & Gardner, where he served as lead litigation counsel before courts of law nationwide, including the United States Supreme Court.

Professor Greenberger is a Phi Beta Kappa graduate of Lafayette College and the University of Pennsylvania Law School, where he served as editor-in-chief of the Law Review.
